

Sustainability

At Agati, our core belief is simple: you shouldn't have to buy it twice.

Durability is the foundation of every product we make. We believe one of the most impactful things we can do as a company is to design and build furniture that withstands the test of time—especially in high-traffic public spaces. We achieve this through two primary strategies:

1. Construction

Agati doesn't build office furniture—we engineer products specifically designed to endure 24/7 use in public environments. This starts with meticulous material selection, precision engineering, and high-quality craftsmanship to ensure our products remain strong, functional, and attractive over a lifetime.

2. Maintenance

The most sustainable products are the those that don't end up in a landfill. That's why we design our products to be easily deconstructed, maintained, and repaired. This approach not only extends their life but also ensures they can be disassembled and directed into appropriate recycling streams at the end of their use.

In addition to durability and maintainability, we take sustainability seriously in our material sourcing and shipping practices:

Materials

- We primarily use locally sourced American materials—renewable resources harvested from responsibly managed forests.
- All our composite wood products meet CARB Phase 2 (California Air Resources Board) compliance standards, which significantly limit formaldehyde emissions and VOCs.
- Our materials are free of harmful PFAS chemicals.
- We use water-based glues in nearly every application, and low-VOC adhesives certified under BIFMA 7.6.3 standards for others.

Shipping & Waste Reduction

- Most of our products are blanket-wrapped, reducing single-use packaging waste and allowing for reusable transport materials.
- We operate on a Just-in-Time manufacturing model, which minimizes storage needs, cuts down waste, and conserves resources.
- We actively recycle production scrap and dispose of any waste in a safe, responsible manner.

Sustainability isn't just a feature of our products—it's built into everything we do. From construction to end-of-life, Agati is committed to creating durable, maintainable, and environmentally responsible furniture for public spaces.
